Friedrich University of Alexandria, School of Law & Political Sciences

1 PREAMBLE AND DEFINITIONS

- 1.1 This Uniform Code of the Alexandrian Journal of Law, Philosophy and Politics, abbreviated as UC-AJLP, herein referred to as “the Document” shall be the formative document detailing the conduct and form of the Alexandrian Journal of Law, Philosophy and Politics, abbreviated as AJLP, herein referred to as “the Journal”.
- 1.2 This Journal shall be a collection of writings produced by the citizens of the Kingdom of Alexandria in regards to the topics of Law, Philosophy, and Politics in a respectable, analytic and academic character.
- 1.3 The Journal shall allow for as wide a breadth of schools of thought as possible, within the limits of respect and academic character, as long as these schools of thought are positively identified and labelled by those which submit on behalf of.
- 1.4 The Journal's goal is to advance the knowledge of the Alexandrian people through civil discussions and collaborative, constructive creation of frameworks.
- 1.5 The Administrators of the Journal are appointed by the Dean of the School of Law & Political Sciences, and include the Dean.

2 GUIDING PRINCIPLES, DISQUALIFYING QUALITIES

- 2.1 (a) The Journal shall aim to accept, as laid out in 1.3, as many schools of thought as possible, though must be limited in their capacity to be productive and constructive to the purpose laid out within 1.4. (b) It is left to the discretion of the administrators of the Journal to judge the balance of these two ideals on a case-by-case basis.
- 2.2 The journal may specifically disqualify submissions based on following qualities;
 - 2.2.1 Usage of inappropriate language (i) without merit, such as but not limited to, (a) profanity or extreme wording, (b) discriminatory rhetoric or language, (c) attacks on character “ad hominem” and (d) filibustering.
 - 2.2.2 The dismissal of the value of academic work in general, either through motive or absurdism.
 - 2.2.3 Excessive or broad use of Generative Artificial Intelligence in the work,
 - 2.2.4 A lack of substance,
 - 2.2.5 A lack of cooperation with the administrators of the Journal in ensuring the submission fits the category which it was submitted for.

3 SUBMISSIONS, CATEGORIES & METHOD

- 3.1 The Administrators of the Journal are to organise a time period for the release of each Journal, defining the time periods for submission and publication.
- 3.2 The submissions, if additional special categories are opened, may be restricted to parts of the public.
- 3.3 Under normal circumstances, the categories of the submissions are as follows:
 - 3.3.1 Research Paper, a submission which is of analytical nature, often incorporating statistical evidence, and examining credible, cited information.
 - 3.3.1.1 Submissions of this type are subject to strict scrutiny and feedback by the Administrators.
 - 3.3.2 Article, a submission which is of analytical and persuasive nature and is based on philosophic or political frameworks, either foundational or building off of existing frameworks.
 - 3.3.2.1 Submissions of this type are only subject to the use of the terms used within, and the identification of the schools (as required under 1.3 of this Document).
 - 3.3.3 Opinion, a submission which is an essay-styled submission which may be persuasive or critical, often acting as a declaration of a viewpoint.
 - 3.3.3.1 Submissions of this type are only subject to scrutiny under 1.3 and 2.2
